NATO Affirms Spending Pledge

Ministers Agree to Keep 3% Rise in Arms Budgets

The Associated Press BRUSSELS - The North Atlantic alliance on Tuesday reaffirmed pledge to increase military spending 3 percent a year despite European economic woes and pressure to shift spending to social neet the threat.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and 13 other de-fense ministers reaffirmed the commitment unanimously at a NATO planning conference, ac-cording to senior U.S. officials traveling with Mr. Weinberger.

The officials, who asked that their names not be published, said the commitment was made after Mr. Weinberger gave a "grim" as-sessment of Soviet military strength and warned that increased Western spending is needed to ance figures were released.

The officials quoted Mr. Weinberger as telling his counterparts "the current and prospective leaders of the Soviet Union may be impelled by their lack of success in other fields to turn to the one field where they have confidence and capability: stark military power and military threats."

Additional Resources In addition to the "3-percent pledge, the ministers promised to make additional resources available for defense, the officials said. Details would be made clear on Wednesday at the conclusion of the two-day meeting, they said. One of the plans will call for admuch as $4 billion, for military infrastructure projects -- roads, airfields and buildings - in Western Europe. Alliance members made the pledge to increase arms spending 3 percent a year in real terms, beyond inflation, in 1978, deciding it was the best benchmark to measure military growth. In recent months, however, European alliance members - oolably West Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark and Brit-ain - have been seeking new criteria. Their leaders have argued that high unemployment - more than 7 percent in the 10 European Economic Community countries and a decline in growth have required a diversion of spending to 83 Guatemalans social programs. On the eve of the meeting, British Defense Minister John Nott said he hoped the alliance would continue high military spending. but that it should try to measure capability in new ways, without using the 3 percent as a rigid rule. The U.S. officials said, nevertheless, that the Europeans accepted the need for such a benchmark and would try to meet it. They said the Europeans were impressed by Mr. Weinberger's assessment of the threat of Soviet Over the past eight years, the Soviet Union has maintained production of 1,000 new fighter planes a year and has greatly increased the power of its Central European ground forces, according to the assessment

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt agreed at a joint news conference that "we do not feel we can go on ignoring the fact that the present system results in two big contributors and eight beneficiar-ies." The oeo-Gaullist leader's suggestion that conserva-tives should field only one candidate in each legislative election district as a show of unity against the left was quickly rejected by Jean Lecanuet, president of the Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's party, the UDF.

Mr. Lecannet asserted that the Giscardists are ful-ly satisfied with the traditional arrangement under which two conservative candidates run in each district during the first election round and then rally behiod the largest vote-getter in the second round.

Besides benefiting from the center-right split, the Socialists are hoping that Mr. Mitterrand will enjoy a honeymoon period with the electorate in the coming weeks that might improve the left's chances of gaining a majority of seats in the legislative elections next month.

Exchange of Views

Mr. Mitterrand is expected to pot forth the same campaign argument used by Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and his conservative predecessors; namely, that since the electorate voted him into office, it should give him the legislative majority he needs to govern. The alternative, Socialist spokesmen suggest, would be a confrontatioo between the president and a hostile legislature that could lead to an institutional crisis.

In the coming weeks, the president-elect is also day-old history, and his followers seem in no mood to lorget their anger at Mr. Chirac. bound to gain advantage from his stature as chief of state. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and

West German Chancellor Heimut Schmidt both said on Tuesday that they looked forward to an early ex-change of views with Mr. Mitterrand. And such a meeting could help defuse conservative arguments that Mr. Mitterrand's election is viewed as disastrous by France's allies.

Besides making inroads against the conservatives, Mr. Mitterrand is hoping that the legislative elections will reduce the Communist contingent in the National Assembly and give him more leverage against the party's demands that Communist ministers be included in his government.

In the first round of the presidential election on April 26, large numbers of Communist voters backed Mr. Mitterrand, dropping the Communist score to 15 percent, the party's worst showing in 45 years. But . there is no certainty that these voters will continue to support Socialist candidates in the legislative elec-

WASHINGTON --- When Israeli jet fighters, including U.S.-built F-15s, shot down nine Soviet-built Syrian MiG-21s in air battles over Lebanon in 1979, a key to the Israeli victories lay in a small, ungainly looking plane that was circling out of sight far from the battles.

The plane was also built in the United States, by Grumman, and is known as the E-2C Hawkeye. It is a radar surveillance aircraft, much smaller than the four-engine E-3A AWACS surveillance jets the United States bas agreed to sell Saudi Arabia. But it does the same kind of job, using electronie eyes to spot approaching enemy aircraft 200 miles

(320 kilometers) away. It is in large measure because Israel knows what Hawkeye can do that it is most worried about the Reagan administratioo's controversial proposal to sell five Boeing-built Airborne Warning and Control System jets to the Saudis beginning in 1985.

The Hawkeye radar, according to informed sources, picked up the Syrian MiGs as they were rolling down the runway, and the Israelis were waiting for them. A new brochure from Grumman extolling the Hawkeye confirms this, reporting that "Syrian MiGs are constantly under surveillance even while taking off from bases near Damascus." Sources say the Hawkeye radar can spot anything going more than 80 mph.

Penlagon officials briefing reporters' last month played down the likelihood that AWACS could become a threat to Israel and stressed its importance to the Saudis in meeting challenges from other coun-tries. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. also recently urged congressional opponents of the sale to wait for final details before labeling it a threat to Israel.

. But there are some U.S. military specialists experienced in both Middle East affairs and AWACS operations who take a different view.

They believe the plane could become a source of instability in the Middle East. It could even, they feel, again catch Americans in an Arab-Israeli shoot-out. That happened in 1967 when Israeli ships and planes shot up and almost sank the USS Liberty, a Navy intelligence ship that was eavesdropping off the Gaza Strip.

In the view of the military specialists critical of the proposal, Saudi AWACS, with their ability to look hundreds of miles across borders, will heighten Israeli fears that their pre-eminent military striking arm — their air force — will be living in "a glass house." Thus, some specialists believe that if an AWACS were 'operating over Saudi territory anywhere near Israel's borders during a crisis in the Middle East, it likely would be one of the first targets hit by Israeli planes. If Americans were helping the Saudis operate the complex planes, it is conceivable that another Liberty-type incident could develop, they say.

Senior officials in both State and Defense departments, however, believe this scenario is far-fetched. If Israel launched a pre-emptive attack against AWACS, it undoubtedly would be with the help of the four Hawkeye planes the United States sold it in 1978. Hawkeye was originally developed for, and is in service with, the U.S. Navy.

Keeping Track

AWACS and Hawkeye can keep track of each other electronically, although the AWACS radar has a somewhat longer range. Hawkeye, however, also has a passive detection system that would allow the Israelis to spot the AWACS radar beam even when the Hawkeye radar is turned off.

Beyond this potential Israeli-Saudi game of electronic cat and mouse, Egypt also has said it wants to buy the Hawkeye. The Egyptians, mindful of Libya and other hostile Arab air forces, believe it will add stability and defense capability for the region when they, too, bave these planes.

But skeptics among the U.S. specialists believe the prospect of three different air forces flying in the same area with sophisticated radar surveillance planes supplied by the United States might put more of a hair-trigger on pre-emptive strikes during a period of high tension.

U.S. experts familiar with AWACS and Hawkeye say they are superior, especially AWACS, to any-thing of their kind in the world, including warning planes in service or under development in the Soviet Union and Britain. No other allied country has been given AWACS, although 18 planes are on order for the NATO command in Europe.

Skeptics believe the Saudi AWACS will not only make Israel nervous, but Iran and Iraq as well. They argue that these planes, which can stay in the air 11 hours, or double that with aerial refueling, could keep an eye on the region but be based on Diego Garcia, in the Indian Ocean, or in Oman and kept under U.S. control.

U.S. Sale to Japan

WASHINGTON (AP) --- The United States plans to sell Japan an additional four E-2C Hawkeye planes for about $270 million. Japan previously bought four of the aircraft.

The Pentagon said Monday that a formal notification of the new sale was sent to Congress. Military officials noted that the deal had been in the works long before last week's visit to Washington by Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki.

New York Times Service ISLAMABAD, Pakistan --- The proposed $500-million-a-year package of American military and economic aid for Pakistan falls sbort of matching Soviet military assistance to India, which, according to a senior Pakistani official, was what his government wanted Washington to do.

Still, the Pakistani official said that the proposal was acceptable and represented a major improvement over the two-year, $400-million package offered by the Carter administration and spurned by President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq. # Talk of War in Mideast is serious talk of war between Israel and an Arab neighbor. Following a familiar pattern of one thing leading to another, Syria has installed Soviet surface-to-air missiles on the Beirut-Damascus road and along the Syrian-Lebanese border. This challenges Israel's previously uncontested control of Lebanese air space. The Syrian force occupying Lebanon has also taken command of key mountain ridges. The combination, according to Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, constitutes an intolerable threat to Israel's security. According to Mr. Begin, the Israeli air force planned to take out the missiles at the end of April, but was frustrated by the weather. Subsequently. Israel agreed to let the United States try to find a diplomatic solution to the crisis, which has substantial political dimensions. Both Mr. Begin and Syrian leader Hafez Assad need to rally internal support at the moment and the missiles provide the op-portunity to do that by acting tough.

But a lot bas changed since the Yom Kippur War of 1973. For one thing, Egypt, with the largest and best army in the Arab world, has signed a peace treaty with Israel. All those who are critical of the Camp David accords should try contemplating the current situation without them. There is also a war under way between Iraq and Iran, which takes the second strongest Arab fighting force off the firing line with Israel. Furthermore, Syria, which is often an odd man out in the Arab world, is now more isolated than ever, and more dependent on the Soviet Union, which has been accused in some quarters of inspiring the current trouble. All of those factors make Syria's position lonk rather pre-

For the first time since October, 1973, there carious, but weakness sometimes can be a spur to belligerence. And as Washington Post correspondent Jonathan C. Randal has pointed out, "a clever Arab leader can turn military defeat into political victory."

U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib is now sbuttling back and forth trying to prevent the fifth Arab-Israeli war in 33 years from breaking out. It will take the most creative kind of diplomacy to come up with a plan that will satisfy both the Syrians and the Israelis. At a minimum, Israel wants a return to the status quo ante with the air space free and Syrian troops off the Lebanese mountain peaks. Mr. Begin might settle for just the air space. Mr. Assad, having moved the missiles in after Israeli pilots downed two Syrian helicopters, is oot likely to take them out without a facesaving gesture that will protect his political and diplomatic flanks.

The real fear, though, is that Mr. Begin, Mr. Assad or both will decide that the best payoff will result from a war, which probably would be a short, limited conflict. But other Arab countries could come to Mr. Assad's aid, or Israel might decide to strike deeply into Syria. Either decision could lead to superpower involvement. The risks are high and the only seeming certainty is that if Syria doesn't take out the missiles, Israel will. The Soviet Union has its envoy in the area, ton. The United States cannot control Israel's actions and the Soviet Union cannot control Syria, but if a way is not found to get the missiles out of Syria to prevent war, it could be because one superpower wasn't trying hard enough.

Mitterrand, Still Running

Thirty million French voters, we would like to believe, can't be wrong. A majority of them voted for change and they are sure to get it, perhaps more than they bargained for. What kind of change? That, alas, even Francois Mitterrand, the winner in Sunday's presidential runoff, is in no position to say.

Many owners of French assets seem unwilling to wait to find out; they think Mr. Mitterrand is committed to reflating France's economy, risking more inflation, and to nationalizing some major industries. Americans naturally wonder how far the new president will move away from the alliance and, despite his anti-Soviet views, what allied interests he may barter for Communist sup-port at home. Valid though they are, these concerns are premature. By swinging left to oust President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the French have knowingly chosen uncertainty.

Nothing will even begin to come into focus until after two more rounds of voting, probably next month. Mr. Mitterrand wants a new National Assembly more congenial to his Gaullists. Although they received roughly the same number of votes in the 1978 parliamentary voting, the Gaullists tonk 30 percent of the seats to the Socialists' 21 percent.

A proportional system would favor a center-left coalition, but it would also risk a larg-er Communist bloc. In any case, if the present Assembly resists a new electoral law, it could be changed only by a national referen-dum, which Mr. Mitterrand is unlikely to risk.

So the chances are that the Mitterrand government will have to govern by bargaining simultaneously with the center parties and the Communists, balancing one against the other. And the only sure thing about that process is that its course cannot be predicted.

The post-election financial panic should not run long; the Bank of France can probably use its large reserves to prevent a bemorrhage. There is no point in now pressing Mr. Mitterrand about NATO nuclear missiles or how his dependence on Communist votes might affect France's relations with either Moscow or the allies. The strength and stability of his regime will have to be determined before it can choose its course. De Gaulle's main monument, the Constitution of the Fifth Republic, has provided political stability and extraordinary economic progress for 23 years. Now there begins the first transfer of power from right to left, with the nation divided down the middle. For the foreseeable future, Mr. Mitterrand will be concerned not so much with bow to use his new office as how to secure the powers it has had for a generation.

There are many other reasons against Western arms sales to China than those recorded in The New York Times Editorial (IHT, April 17).

Even if the cost of arms shipments could be met, it would take a decade or more to form a Chinese clite capable of effectively absorbing and utilizing the advanced technology. Furthermore, Chinese military leadership may find it ide-ologically impossible to replace the human-wave technique of over-whelming the enemy with simple weapons by ooe needing less manpower and greater fire-power.

Limited weapons supply has other inherent ioconviences. Recent events in Vietnam have shown that the Chinese leadership has little hesitation to military adventurism even if this projects a negative military and political image. If the Chinese were to use Western arms in other parts of Asia and Africa, U.S. goodwill would obviously suf-fer. Worse still, buman blood will spill for no good reason although that is rarely seems a concern of U.S. foreign policy.

Finally, not only does China believe that "an enemy's enemy is my Geneva.

More than Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, he has openly supported the U.S. effort to modernize European nuclear forces. Indeed, my private view is that Mitterrand counts as his chief objective in politics the crushing of

At present, however, he lacks a majority in the French parliament. To get even a working minority, he will have to dissolve the National Assembly and hold legislative elec-tions next month. The only way he Obvious? Of course. But if that attitude creeps far enough into high-level administration thought. is could produce a welcome shift from the prevalent Reaganite view that strategic arms negotiation is a process by which the United States weakens itself.

Restraint

talks with the Soviet Union on lim-

SALT supporters do not argue that strategic arms limitation can do more than restrain Soviet power, in return for similar U.S. re-straint — and therefore bring some order, balance and predictability into what would otherwise be a wide-open arms face. Arms limita-tion is a contribution 10, not a guarantee of, national security.

One of the best arguments for SALT-2, for example, was that it would have limited the Russians to 10 warheads on each of their big-gest missiles — surely better for U.S. security than the 20 or 30 warheads that, without SALT, they can mount per missile.

Mr. Reagan's willingness, expressed in a handwritten letter to Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet lead-er, to discuss "theater nuclear forces" should oot, of course, be not least for its tacif recognition confused with a decision to reopen negotiations for ao arms limitation can be as useful as a U.S. buildup treaty between the two superpowers. Nor does it signal aban-donment of the administration's "linkage" concept, under which

On the contrary, the commu-nique that emerged from the Rome NATO meeting suggests, that Sec-retary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. brought the allies to substantial acceptance of "linkage" — perhaps as an additional price for the president's decision to go ahead with theater nuclear discussions. -

Mr. Reagan had little chance to Mr. Reagan had little chance to avoid that decision had be wanted to. At the NATO meeting of De-cember, 1979, when the European allies agreed at U.S. urging to de-ploy 572 medium-range Craise missiles and Pershing-2 missiles, the United States agreed in turn to enter negotiations with Moscow to seek limitations on both sides' mis-siles.

That promise has been rein-forced by growing European polit-ical controversy about the so-called "modernization" of NATO missile forces, particularly in West Germany and the Netherlands.

If the Reagan administration had reneged on the talks, more-over, the European allies might have reneged on missile deploy-ment — or found it politically im-possible to carry out. Mr. Reagan's letter to Mr. Brezhnev did not, therefore necessarily memory therefore, necessarily represent any substantial change in his jaun-diced view of Soviet intentions or his reservations about strategie arms negotiations. It's worth two cheers, anyway, - sometimes more so. Moscow is reported, for example, to have 1.040 warheads ready for use against Western Europe; they are ployed at the time of the Decem-ber, 1979, NATO meeting.

That suggests, first, the respon-siveness of each side to the other and the difficulty of one outracing the other. Moscow builds up its nuclear power in Western Europe; NATO responds with the 1979 de-cision to "modernize" its missile force; whereupon Moscow builds up even further. With one side or the other in the lead — usually the United States — that kind of lethal leapfrog has been endlessly repeated in the nuclear arms era.

The sequence of events in Europe suggests, further, the logic of arms negotiations, Even when the 1979 program is carried out, NATO will have less than half the Soviet total of warheads - and that not until 1988. Some combination of NATO buildup and a negotiated reduction or stabiliza-tion of Soviet strength, if it can still be obtained, obviously makes more sense than a continuing theater arms race.

Something to Ponder

Finally, the situation suggests that NATO may have been mistakinal NATO may have been mistak-en to decide to deploy new missiles before theater nuclear limitation talks were undertaken. Negotia-tions begun first, under the threat of a Western buildup if the talks did not succeed, might well have prevented or at least limited the a Soviet expansion of the last 18 months. months.

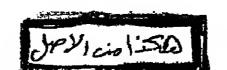

There's something for Mr. Reagan to ponder as he readies a massive new U.S. investment in strategic and conventional forces. That can no more guarantee national security than arms limita-tion can; but so far it ignores the contribution the latter might make.

Hebron Is Microcosm of West Bank Strife

Jews, Arabs Trade Accusations in Ancient Property Dispute

By Norman Kempster

Los Angeles Times Service HEBRON, Israeli-Occupied West Bank - This ancient city of Abraham, traditional birthplace of both the Jewisb and Arab peoples, has become the tensest town on the West Bank, a place where Israel's festering intercommunal strife is closest to the surface. Arab residents of this once totally Arab city of 70,000 complain that Jewish settlers are arving to drive them from their homes with daily provocations ranging from throwing rocks through their windows to firing automatic weapons over their heads.

Jewish community leaders say the Arabs are blowing a lew petty incidents out of proportion. One Jewish settler suggested that the charges were intended to incite Arab mob violence against the Jewish settlers.

Investigation Criticized

The Israeli military government of the West Bank recently ruled, following an investigation, that some incidents of harassment had occurred but that the situation was not as serious as the Arabs said. However, Israel's Hebrew-language newspapers and state-run television have given substantial coverage to the Arabs' claims. The Ha'aretz newspaper said editorially that the military investigation was inadequate and blased on the side of the lewisb settlers.

Mustafa Natshe, the Arab act-ing mayor of Hebron, charges that Jewish settlers are trying to make life so uncomfortable for the city's Arabs that large numbers of them will move out, clearing the way for Jewish settlement in the heart of the ancient city.

Cambodia's Baby Boom Reverses Trend

House In Dispute

PHNOM PENH - Cambodia, which is said to have suffered the deaths of millions of its people in the late 1970s, is experiencing a birth-rate explosion reminiscent of Europe's postwar baby boom.

Despite major health and social problems and the political uncertainties arising from the Viet-namese military occupation, the current rise in pregnancies and births seems to ensure that the population will regain its size of the early 1970s.

The Viet-amese-backed government gives the present population as 5.7 million. It says about three million people died during the pro-Chinese Khmer Rouge rule from 1975 to early 1979.

The exact number of deaths resulting from the civil war, famine and revolutionary excesses in the decade of the 1970s will probably never be known, and foreign specialists have frequently expressed fears about the survival of the Cambodian people. But now health experts in the country are worried not about survival but about limiting families to five children each.

Exact figures, or even reliable estimates, are not available for the birth, death or overall population growth rates, mainly because of the difficulties of gathering such information. But the new babies are one of the most visible phonomena in the cities and country-

Today illegitimate babies are commonplace in Cambodia. The cause is partly the preponderance of women, estimated by some officials as 60 percent of the adult

Cambodia has not yet developed a family planning program, but Mrs, Ang Sarun believes one will he necessary.

U.S. Edition of Geo Hits Bumpy Road

By N.R. Kleinfield New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The dream was that it would be come a Cadillac among magazines. Many bags of gold were laid aside to insure success. The West Germans promised to pump $20 million into it, and it was clear they were not kidding. The sumptuous penthouse offices at 450 Park Avenue alone were testimony to that.

"In the beginning, the sense of promise was unbe-lievable," recalls an original member of the staff. "We thought we were going to do something really unique and important."

But after two years of publication, glossy Geo mag-azine with its lime-green cover, which thinks of itself as a running record of the condition of the planet; looks more like an Edsel than a Cadillac. Since its debut was announced in February, 1978, by its Hamburg parent, the Gruner & Jahr publishing company, it bas had three publishers and three managing edi-tors. Last June, 14 of its 36 staffers were dismissed. The $20 million is just a memory. Geo's losses are already reckoned to have exceeded $35 million, and magazine people figure that Gruner & Jahr will have to part with $50 million to $60 million before it ever sees a penny of profit.

Owners Say They Will Stick It Out

But despite the troubles, the German owners insist they are going to stick this out. "We dido't go into this market for testing purposes," observed Jan Hensmann, the head of Gruner & Jahr's magazine group. "This is part of an international marketing strategy. We invested too much money to get where we are, but we are there and we are content to be there.

Peter Diamandis, installed last fall as Geo's latest publisher, has worked up a fistful of tricks that he is betting will shake the magazine out of its miseries. Many, however, believe the dream is fatally flawed. "I've begun to think of Geo as a number on a roulette wheel," a magazine editor remarks. "The odds are that its number may eventually come up, but the quescon is how many chips do you have to plunk down before it happens

Geo is, without doubt, one of the most ambitious and singular magazine experiments to hit the U.S. market. As conceived by Gruner & Jahr, which owns the prosperous Stern and other magazines, the idea was to fashion an international network of Geos, starting with editions in Germany, France and the United States. The magazine was intended to probe the "human geography" of the world, in a more hard-hitting way than has been the custom at the basically upbeat National Geographic, which Geo staffers sometimes allude to as "the big yellow one."

Geo was going to buck a lot of articles of faith in the magazine business. For one thing, the reader was to pay most of the magazine's freight. Bedeviled by spiraling postal and production costs, American mag-azines bave increasingly sought to wean more money from readers, though few manage to pocket more than half their revenues from circulation. Geo was aiming at collecting 75 percent.

Thus, the cover price was fixed at $4. A year's subscription would set you back $36. Readers were to be rewarded for shelling out so much money by oot being hombarded with ads, which would be held to 29 pages an issue, with about 80 percent of the maga-zine editorial matter. Only four-color, full-page ads would be accepted.

The formula clicked in Germany and France, where the Geos quickly moved into the black, but calamities beset the U.S. Geo from the start. The managing editor, Peter Young, a Saturday Review alumnus, was dismissed before the first issue appeared, after disputes with the German owners. Before a replacement could be found, the magazine was run by editor in chief H.J. Kaplan, whose previous job was as communications director at the Bendix Corp. Two months later, Geo's president and publisher, Two months later, Geo's president and publisher of Business Charles Randolph, formerly publisher of Business Week, was dismissed after squabbles over meddling from the owners. Igor Gordevitch, who had been publisher of the defunct Vision magazine, stepped in.

In May, 1979, the magazine began regular publica-tion, but people balked at the price. A circulation of 300,000 was expected in two years and 500,000 in three. Early issues drew about 100,000 paid readers. Only recently has the circulation base been raised to 250,000, after Geo picked up subscribers from the defunct English-language version of Realites.

One of Geo's chronic demons has been frequent quarrels among its U.S. staff, coupled with jousts be-tween its New York staff and the owners in Hamburg. Initially, for instance, the Hamburg people wanted many of the stories ordered for the German Geo to appear in the U.S. edition, but, as one staffer recalls, "German journalists are very imprecise. We consistently found when we tried to use German stories that they were full of errors."

Robert Christopher, an editor at Newsweek, was installed as managing editor (only to be ousted last June), and strove to move the magazine away from its German kin. He insisted on more U.S.-originated pieces, and he made Geo more topical to give people a reason to pay $36 rather than the $11.50 it would cost them to get "the big yellow one." The German bosses — who, in Germany and France, faced no competition from publications such as National Geoeraphic. Smithsonian or Natural History - never cottoned to such changes. Then there was the Thomas Hoepker affair. Christopher, who remains a Geo contributing editor, says only that his departure was sparked by a "difference of opinion about the editorial philosophy." However, according to Geo staffers, it was also bastened by clashes with Hoepker, a former Stern photographer who, as executive editor, presides over photo selection and production.

After a string of disputes, Christopher told the German owners last spring that either he or Hoepker had to go. Brought in as the new managing editor was David Maxey, who had been the editor at Psychology Today and Look. Under him, the magazine has bemore timeless, and there has been a return to more German-initiated ideas.

Opera Hamburg 'Wozzeck' Drops Realism

By David Srevens

HAMBURG — Alban Berg's Wozzęck" appears to be joining that great basic repertory considered so familiar that straight productions are giving way to suggings that analyze and psychoana-hyze with often baleful results.

The Hamburg State Opera was in the forefront of bringing "Woz-zeck" back from Nazi-era obbvion with Guenther Rennert's exemplary 1953 staging. Now it is one of the first to move on to a secondgeneration production of Berg's nasterpiece. The result is likely to prove less durable.

Berg was not one to leave much to chance, and he expressly asked for the "greatest possible realism" in most of the opera's 15 scenes. Thus, the spectator would be pre-sented with the real events surrounding Wozzeck's oppression and breakdown, while absorbing the downtrodden soldier's paranoid perceptions through the words and the orchestra. But the French stage director

What we have is another case of the movies tackling the impossible. The profound psychological novel often eludes screen treatment. The movies have handled the novel of picturesque incident, of colorful figwres, of unusual milicus to complete satisfaction, as such films as "Gone With The Wind," "The Third Man," "Dracula" or "The Blue Angel" evidence. Confronted with Henry James the scenarists are faced with a double problem. James had a defective knowledge of theatrical requirements and his attempts at playwriting, like those of Conrad and George Moore, failed dismally. Several of the shorter stories — "Washington Square," "The Turn of the Screw," "The Aspern Papers" and "The Europeans" — have been dramatized by other hands with success, but "Wings of the Dove," when adapted for the stage, though retaining the era of the original, missed its aim. It did retell the story in general outline, as does the current movie, but it lacked the nuances and subtleties, the style and flavor, that are the lifeblood of James' fictional art. double problem. flavor, that are the lifeblood of James' fictional art.

Mexico Plans to Lift Oil Output

By Marlise Simons Washington Post Service

MEXICO CITY - Mexico, the world's fourth largest oil producer, is planning to increase oil production beyond its previously set limits.

The decision by Mexico, which is oot a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, means that more non-OPEC nil will become available on the world market at a time when the Arab members of the oil cartel are talking of imposing sharp production cutbacks to bolster declining oil prices. The cutback proposals are expected to be bothy debated at the May 25 OPEC meeting to Geneva,

In two months' time, Mexico expects in be producing 2.93 million barrels per day, a level nearly 200,000 barrels above its official production limit. Current production is put at about 2.6 millinn barrels per day.

The decision, which appareotly was made sev-eral months ago, was leaked last week when a Mexican newspaper published a confidential pro-duction schedule of Pemex, the state oil company.

The leak of the decision appears to have had more to do with disagreements within the government about whether to step up oil exports ar con-serve energy resources for the future than with aiming a blow at OPEC. While nnt a member, Mexico is not hostile in the nil grouping.

Since the present administration broke the taboo against large-scale export in 1976, there has been a sharp dispute between the Ministry of Na-tional Resources, which advocates preservacion, and Pemex, which wants to expand.

Oil oow accounts for 74 percent of Mexico's exports and critics repeatedly have warned against further dependence of the economy on oil. And, kindling nationalist fires, these critics point to a recent study for the U.S. Senate Energy Committee recommending that the United States encourage Mexico to develop production capacity well beyond its needs. Of the 1.5 million barrels per day that Mexico is exporting at the moment, 680,000 go to the United States. Mexico's planned production increase, which Pemer declined to confirm, stems from its need for more cash to finance its ambitious development program.

"Mexico responds in its own needs. It's obviously not in its interest to step up production when prices are down," said one source tamiliar with the oil industry here, "but you cannot blame it for steering a steady course when the market is flip-flopping. It's one thing to turn down your valves and cut back ... like the big Arab pro-ducers can; it's another to tamper with your prepared development projects." Mexican officials oonetheless are worried about the declining oil prices. Mexico, which sells via contracts and does not deal on the spot market, has been forced to cut the price of its heavy crude by $2.50 per barrel. This year it has not increased the prices of its lighter oil, which it usually does on a quarterly basis.

Even if Mexico's oil is slightly overpriced, in-dustry sources say, the long waiting lines of cli-ents are likely to continue because Mexico is seen as a stable and safe source.

Mexico has tripled its output over the past five years and it could increase that much again within a short period. The country's production ranks behind that of the Soviet Union, Saudi Arabia and the United States.

Analysts said further gains are likely to be limited because investors cootinue to be worried about the prospects for interest rates and the situatioo in the Mideast, where tensioos between Syria and Israel persist.

Despite the concerns, the market was able to rally this afterooon, largely because "it just ran out of sellers," Michael Metz of Oppenheimer & Co. said.

Berlin's magnificent essay, he dreams of the return of a perfect Roman Republic: think of how much oostalgia a 3,000-year-old god must endure, even as he turns into a worm.

He schemes at chance. He invites rebellion. He longs for a surprise. He orders historians burned on pyres of their own published works, because they have missed the metaphysical point. He confides the truth to journals that will become the sacred texts of later generations. He fiddles with genetic engineering. He will be both the leader and the "outsider" who threatens leadership. An observer de-cides that he is "both the storm and the ship." He seeks what Herbert calls

BRIDGE_

THE number of spoken languages in the world is over three thousand. The number of bidding languages in bridge is distinctly short of that total, but the gap is closing. Eso-leric systems, each known to a handful of adherents and incomprehensible to everyone else, are springing up in many parts of the world.

Many of these are based on the re-lay principle, which is demonstrably more effective in slam bidding than standard methods. One hand makes a series of minimum bids, or relays, while his partner describes his holding while his pariner describes his horizing in great detail. All these methods require a great deal of partnership effort, and the strain on the memory is considerable. The simplest of them is the "Symmetric Relay." devised by two New Zea-land experts, Roy Kerr and Walt

Jones. The diagramed deal from a recent: game in New York was not a success for the method, but it serves to illustrate the type of situation that can develop. South's opening bid was artificial and strong, and his next two bids were relays. North's sequence convention-ally described 4-1-4-4 with at least 10 high-card points. Knowing that there was no fil, South tried to settle in three no-trump, but North had extra strength to show. His four-diamond bid showed additional values and five controls, with an ace counting two and a king one. South now knew that his partner held the diamond king and two of the three missing aces. He reverted to relays, and North's next two bids, using a method known as "denial cue-bids," served to locate all four of his useful honor cards.

South could now count four chil tricks, three diamond tricks and three spade tricks. He could not, however locate the spade jack or the diamond jack, both crucial cards, if North had aeither, it would be right to stop in five no-trump. If he had both, 12 tricks would be a certainty. And if he had one, there would be a good play for slam.

So South carried on to six no-trung and was disappointed by the dummy It lacked not only the two vital jacks but also the diamond ten. He won the club opening lead in his hand and cashed six more tricks in the black suits.

South's plan was to take the las club and three diamond winners. I the diamonds did nnt divide evenly, a heart lead toward the king might stil fornish a 12th trick. But when the club nine-was cashed and West reluc tantly parted with the beart jack, the declarer should have thought again.

The heart ten could now have been ducked to West to make the contract, but South stuck to his original plan and was down one. West won the last two tricks with the heart ace and the diamond jack. . .

tour is to give players a chance to see European stadia, European players, weather ... , even how the grass grows. It is part of their growing up." It is hoped Santana's settled side

But Duesseldorf could produce the most impressive soccer of the week. Dynamo Tbilisi vs. Carl Zeiss Jena in the Cup Winners Cop final has alrady been described as a "financial disaster" because it is unlikely that West scrib Germans will come out en masse to watch an all-Eastern European final and certain that the two competitors will be allowed only minimai traveling support.

Gliders

A pity. Carl Zeiss Jens is noth-ing to get excited about, and its factics will he not unlike Manchester's last Saturday. Tollisi, on the other hand, is capable of gliding through, over or around the most cynical of defenses. Hans-Ulrich Grapenthin, Jena's veteran and agile keeper, will need all his expe-rience to keep the East Germans in the game if the unpredictable Georgians strike form.

We must hope that the ghostly atmosphere from empty stands does not depress the flair of Tbilisi's unique blend of Russian and Latin. A year ago, Liverpool, a successful European challenger for 15 years, was outplayed by Thilisi, and two months ago the Georgians were simply breathtaking in London.

Two goals came from the electric pace and economical funishing of Ramaz Shenaglia, the second the end-product of an inturun as the Astros defeated the Reds. 5-0, here Monday night. Ryan (2-1), the third most prol-ific strikeout pitcher in baseball history with 3,148, struck out five itive 60-yard through-ball from David Kipiani, the baldiog in the first two imnings as he post-ed his first complete game this sea-son. # Cooney Knocks Out Norton At 0:54 of the 1st Round

NEW YORK - Exactly four years to the night that he knocked out Duane Bohick in 58 seconds, Ken Norton was koocked unconscious by Gerry Coonev in 54 seconds Monday night

Cooney was as devastating as his fans could possibly hope. And Norton, two months out of retire-ment, was as bad as any once-fine fighter could ever fear he might be-

Norton became tangled on the bottom strand of ropes in his own corner as he was slipping loward the canvas beneath a frightening barrage of punches. "I stopped the fight," said referee Tony Perez, "because one or two more punches would have been fatal."

Perez earned Cooney's praise as "a great referee."

"I got a little bit frightened," said Cooney, "because I kept hit-ting him and he was unconscions." Dr. Edwin A. Campbell, chief physician of the New York State Athletic Commission, had in fight his way past dozens of Cooney fans who had stormed the ring. When he got there, he said, Norton's eyes were open, "but he was unconscious -- just staring ahead." Campbell later pronouoced Norton "oeurologically OK," say-ing the quick knockout was "a lot better than taking a lot of punches over several rounds." Norion, able to attend the postfight news conference, said his mistake was in hacking up. Coo-ney backed him up, surprisingly, not with his fearsome left book but with an overhand right to the head that set up two hooks to the body. "1 hit him another body shot," said Cooney, "and I heard him gasp.

Nortoo managed to spin his way off the ropes once, but Cooney continued punching away. Then he spun Norton back onto the ropes

A left hook to the head appeared to be the punch that knocked Norton unconscious, and champion, three times Muhammad Ali's oemesis, slid slowly down, taking punches every inch of the defenseless for the last dozen seconds of the fight. The final blows were among the most frightening spectators will ever see. It was as if Norton were sitting on his ring stool and Cooney were measuring him, then hooking him.

For those who wish to see Cooney as a great future champion, Monday night can be cited as evidence. For those who think Norton came only for a payday - and paid for it hrutally - there is also evidence for that.

"Get a job, Norton," screamed a ringside fan after a fight in which

Norton did not land one punch. Seldom has any major heavyweight fight been surrounded by such nearly unanimous cynicism. It was, in effect, slaughtered by its imag

The almost universal perception of this affair was that Cooocy, the latest in the seemingly never-end-ing succession of "white-hope" heavyweights, simply arrived to collect a quick $1 million with an easy tune-up victory over a bigname has-been.

Real Busines

Coopey's real business, it is assumed by the jaded, is a WBC title fight with Mike Weaver in September or October. That contract has already been signed, contingent on Cooney's not knocking himself out against Norton.

The rap against Cooney has al-ways been that he's never fought anybody, that his route in a title fight has been a carefully prepared path devoid of genuine tests. That means Ron Lyle (KO, 1) and Jimmy Young (KO, 4) were both over the hill before they met Cooney's powerful short left hook and long jab. The folks who con-sidered Lyle and Young to be ol-dies but not goodies think the same of Norton. And with some reason.

Norton, down from 260 pounds to 225, was a splendid physical specimen from the waist up, and he had worlds of quality experience. Such unproven talents as Cooney have always sought just such warhorses against whom to prove themselves. To Madison Square Garden's misfortune. New York did not take this mismatch — Cooney was estimates shortly before the fight were that the Garden would lose more than $500,000, perhaps as much as $1 millioo. Ticket sales were so bad - and national television interest so low at any price - that the Garden sold the fight to cable television's Home Box Office for $500,000. 1o effect, that ensured that the match. which had such a disappointing advance gate, would not have any significant walk-up sale, since any fight fan could watch the bout in any corner bar.

In such an atmosphere, those who came were at the Garden mainly for two reasons. Either they smelled a Norton upset (intriguing if only for the consternatioo it would cause in heavyweight matchmaking circles] or they wanted to appraise the development of the vastly touted Cooney.

The way we strolled the streets while she said, "Do you like 'The Moon and Sixpence' by Somerset Maug-ham?" and I said, "Not half as much as 'Seven Keys to Baldpate," and she said, "Wheo you get back to the States I want you to come up and see my copy of 'Butterfield 8.' "On Twelfth Night. I have al-ways hated Twelfth Night because 'twelfth' always seems like such a silly word with that unpronounce-able 'lfth' right there at the end, and I was shocked when my wife said it was her favorite day of the усаг.

"I suppose your favorite is the Fourth of July," he said. How could he have guessed?

"Bet you can't guess what my fa-vorite movie is," I said. "Let me try: 'Three Men On A Horse'? 'Three Contrades'? 'We Three'? 'The Three Little Pigs'?"

'You're oot even warm.' 'Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs'? "Nope. You're as cold as pease porridge in the pot that's nine days

"What's more, our favorite cocktail is a blend of Four Roses and Vat 69, and after we've had a few she stamps around the parlor singing 'Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest' while I lean out the window singing, 'I've Got tribute to a genuine discussion of my country." The Rosi discussion is a continuing one that does not offer set answers. "I have my doubts and I have oothing against showing them. I hope the public feels this duality in me." They do and they doo't. For an admirer such as the critic Pauline Kael, Rosi's generous and ceaseless probing is his strong point: Writing of his 1965 film "Il Momento della Verita" (The Moment of Truth) she says the film "raises emotions that neither its moviemaking team nor we can fully comprehend, and so the material draws us in and stays with us. It does so, I think, because its style expresses a larger vision of life than that of his characters."

Other critics, because nearly all Rosi's films deal with problems of contemporary Italian life and because several have centered on real people (the Sicilian bandit Salvatore Giuliano, the Italian oil czar Enrico Mattei, the mafioso Lucky Luciano), have wrongly assumed that his is a Russian short story about six hrothers and the small daughter of one of them who return to their village on the death of their mother. Rosi and his co-writer, Tonino Guerra, reduced the six brothers to three and set the sto-ry in a poor scrabbled village in the south whose young have all had to find work elsewhere.

Feeling of Dislocation

Rosi, tall, with a bald, compact head and a steady gaze behind tinted glasses, still feels dislocated after having left Naples for Rome 35 years ago. "All my films — there are only 12 so it is easy to make an analysis - are a fresco of contemporary Italy, but with universal aspects as well," he said in his Paris hotel before. leaving for Cannes.

The three brothers are a 50year-old judge who lives in Rome and is harassed by terrorist threats, a 40-year-old teacher in a Naples reformatory and a 30year-old factory worker in Turin. None lives in the place of his birth," Rosi says. "They are not really part of where they live although their professions put them in touch with the most burning problems today — jus-tice, youth labor."

Their mother's death brings the family together for 24 hours in which each man questions his past, present and future and in which each man finally weeps alone. "When it is a question of a mother's death each persoo weeps for himself," Rosi says. "It is oot an event that unites, it is an event that depletes."

The brothers are afraid and unsettled, their motives are like most people's, confused and impure. Their widowed father, played by the French actor Charles Vanel, who began his career in 1912, is immense in his fortitude and silen1 grief. "The father represents the value of an-cient rural cultures. I want to say don't forget your roots," Rosi

"In a film the truth is the result of gathering a certain oumber of elements and one cannot predict with certainty that a scene will vibrate with authenticity. For me it is enough for a situation to be likely to be true to make it appear later as true." Rosi's own roots include a rich grandfather who, when mined,

Seeing Reality

While Rosi's films show no political bias, people keep trying to find a partisan view in them. "I have this oced to be present in the life of my country," is all he says. He has mildly complained that no one asks whether Robert Altman voted Republican or Democrat, why ask it about Rosi? "I don't lead meetings or write editorials. I make films in which there are words but also lights, public monuments, faces, corridors, telephones that ring ... That is how I see reality — emotions, feelings, memo-ries that become images, camera moves, expressions. My only aim is to invite the public to participate by dealing with specific or general problems of our daily reality. I open my screen as if to a debate.

In "Three Brothers," Rosi says, the main protagonist is time. He has said that the film is intended as an act of confidence and hope, that it is for life against death. For a subtle man such a view may seem over-simple, but Rosi says it isn't if you live in a country terrorized by violence. "I tried to say it in simple words, it may instead sound simplistic. But if you think of the violence that is everywhere in the world and that is especially disturbing in Italy, it is oot simple or simplistic. It is a reality. In the film the brother who is a judge says we must fight for-change but these battles must oever threaten democracy. It may seem obvious that we must choose democracy," Rosi says, "but remember there are others who choose death."

Poet Milosz to Return PEOPLE: Poet Mulosz W Incoment

Czesław Milosz, a Nobel Prize- brothers accused Stigwood winning poet who left his home-land 30 years ago, will return for a tour of three cities next month, the Polish state radio has reported. The poet will receive an honorary doctorate from the Catholic University in Lublin and meet members of the Polish writers' club and the writers' union, the radio said. Besides Warsaw and Lublin, the 1980 laureate also will visit Krakow, the announcement said. He now lives in the United States. Milosz' works have been published inspecial editions in Poland since he won the prize. A recent edition contains what the official news agency described as his entire published work. His poerry generally was unavailable there before he won the prize.

* * * Pabio Picasso's "Guernica" will soon be transferred to Spain after more than 40 years in exile, according to a letter from the Muse-um of Modern Art in New York, where it now hangs. A Spanish Cultural Ministry spokeswoman said the museum, which has had the painting on loan since 1956, informed Spanish Cultural Minister Inigo Cavero that the canvas would soon be ready for the jour-ney. The spokeswoman said Picas-so's heirs had agreed that the huge canvas should be sent to Spain and it was oow a question of arranging final packaging and travel details. According to the Spanish painter's will, the masterpiece would be sent to his native country once democ-racy was restored. Barcelona, Madrid, Malaga and Guernica are competing for the right to receive the canvas, painted in 1937 during Spain's civil war to depict the de-struction by German bombers of the Basque town of Guernica:
